BEING A RESPONSIBLE MANUFACTURER
STINGRAY

Stingray leather, also called shagreen or galuchat, is a material half way between the animal and the mineral and which comes from various families of stingrays.

Stingray hides are collected throughout south-east Asia, but they essentially come from Indonesia.

They are the production of a long established, non-industrial, food fishing tradition. What all our hides share is their suppleness, the richness of their color and the finished quality of their beads. These three attributes have allowed us to distinguish ourselves and earned us the honor of working with great leather goods companies and luxury brands.

Our hides come from traceable, responsible sources.

CITES (the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna anFlora, a.k.a. Washington Convention) is a multilateral treaty designed to protect endangered plants & animals and entered into force on July 1, 1975. Its aim is to ensure that international trade in specimens of wild animals and plants does not threaten the survival of the species in the wild, and it accords varying degrees of protection to more than 35,000 species of animals and plants.

CROCODILE PYTHON

Because it is a moral imperative, a sound sustainable approach to business and the law, AKNAS scrupulously abides by the convention and provides certificates for the two types of skins requiring them: python and crocodile.
