Quality Control

BEING A RESPONSIBLE MANUFACTURER STINGRAY

Stingray leather, also called shagreen or galuchat, is a material half way between the animal and the mineral and which comes from various families of stingrays collected throughout south-east Asia, but essentially from Indonesia..

They come from of a long established, non-industrial, food fishing tradition. Medical properties of the stingray skeleton and some of its internal organs make them also sought after by the pharmaceutical industry. Hides for fine leather crafts are thus a by product of this practice that leaves nothing to waste. Our hides come from traceable, responsible sources.

What all our hides share is their suppleness, the richness of their color and the finished quality of their beads. These three attributes have allowed us to distinguish ourselves and earned us the honor of working with great leather goods companies and luxury brands.

CITES (the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, a.k.a. Washington Convention) is a multilateral treaty designed to protect endangered plants & animals and entered into force on July 1, 1975. Its aim is to ensure that international trade in specimens of wild animals and plants does not threaten the survival of the species in the wild, and it accords varying degrees of protection to more than 35,000 species of animals and plants.

CROCODILE PYTHON

Because it is a moral imperative, a sound sustainable approach to business and the law, AKNAS scrupulously abides by the convention and provides certificates for the two types of skins requiring them: python and crocodile.
